Throws went soaring away above the heads of the men for whom they were intended and again balls were dropped when tossed easily. Altogether there was not lacking any feature of play.

The crowd was a good one and the way the men on the sides lines rooted for their teams was sufficient to gladded the hearts of the players. Once the enthusiasm was so great that fisticuffs resulted from exuberance of feeling, and when the side line Mailes cut loose their yell, it was to make the echoes ring and awaken the crowd to cheers for the loyal club men. Nor was all the shouting from the outside, but the managers took a hand inside . Sidney Boyd, Prop. the ropes, and this caused some pillkia, for when he was described as rotten by one of the members of the League, Newton swore by the hand which captured Aguinaldo that he would have no more of it, and took his playthings off after the first game, causing a delay until he had been placated and consented to run the second.

When the first game was called the Mailes went to the flel! and Clark found some new faces in the opposing batters. Duncan, an old police player, was in the list and Raven also appeared.
